
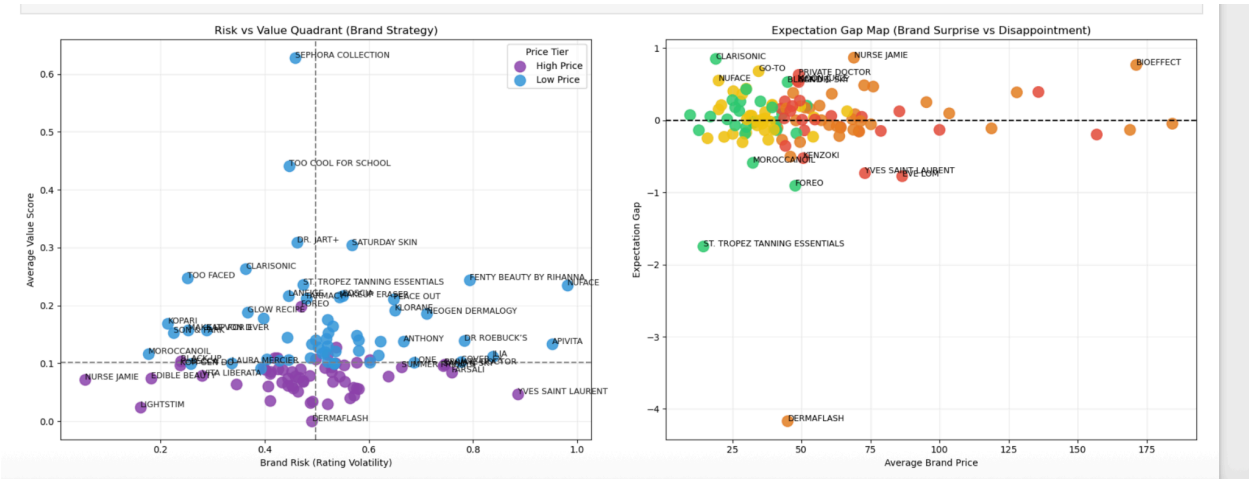
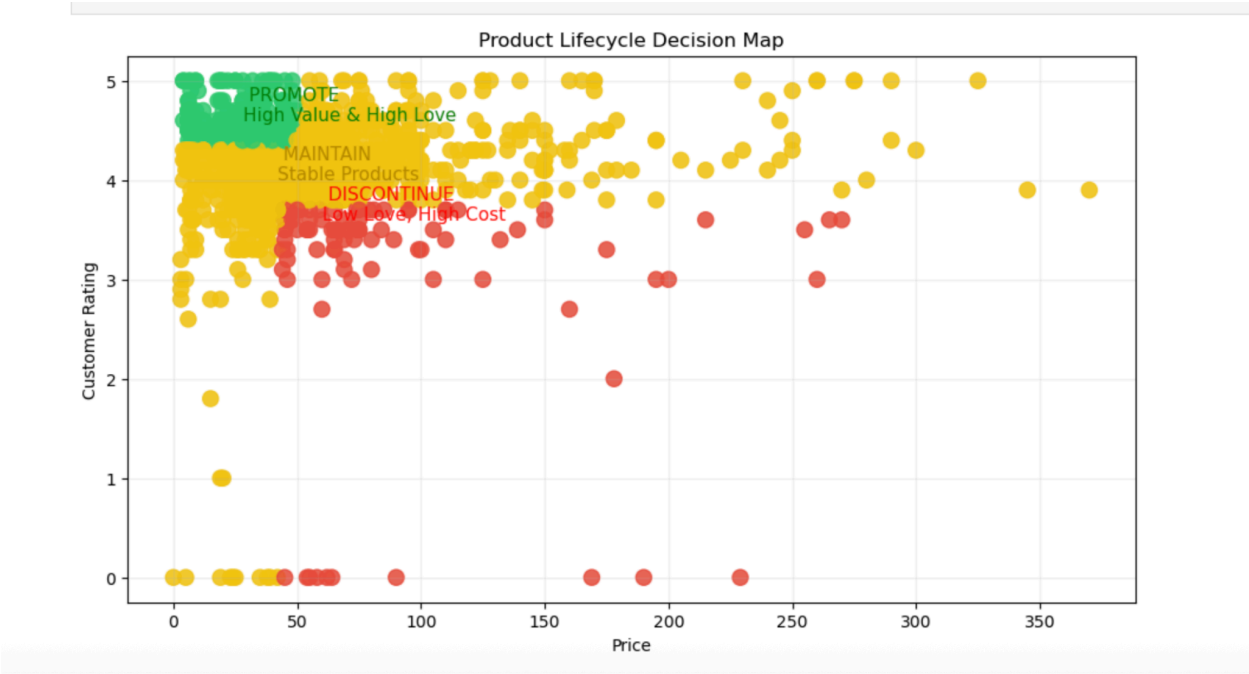
This chart shows how each brand’s value contributes positively or negatively once risk is accounted for. It clearly separates brands that genuinely add value from those whose risk erodes perceived value. This format is commonly used in executive finance and strategy reviews, not student analytics.

2.



This chart shows how each brand’s value contributes positively or negatively once risk is accounted for. It clearly separates brands that genuinely add value from those whose risk erodes perceived value. This format is commonly used in executive finance and strategy reviews, not student analytics.

3.

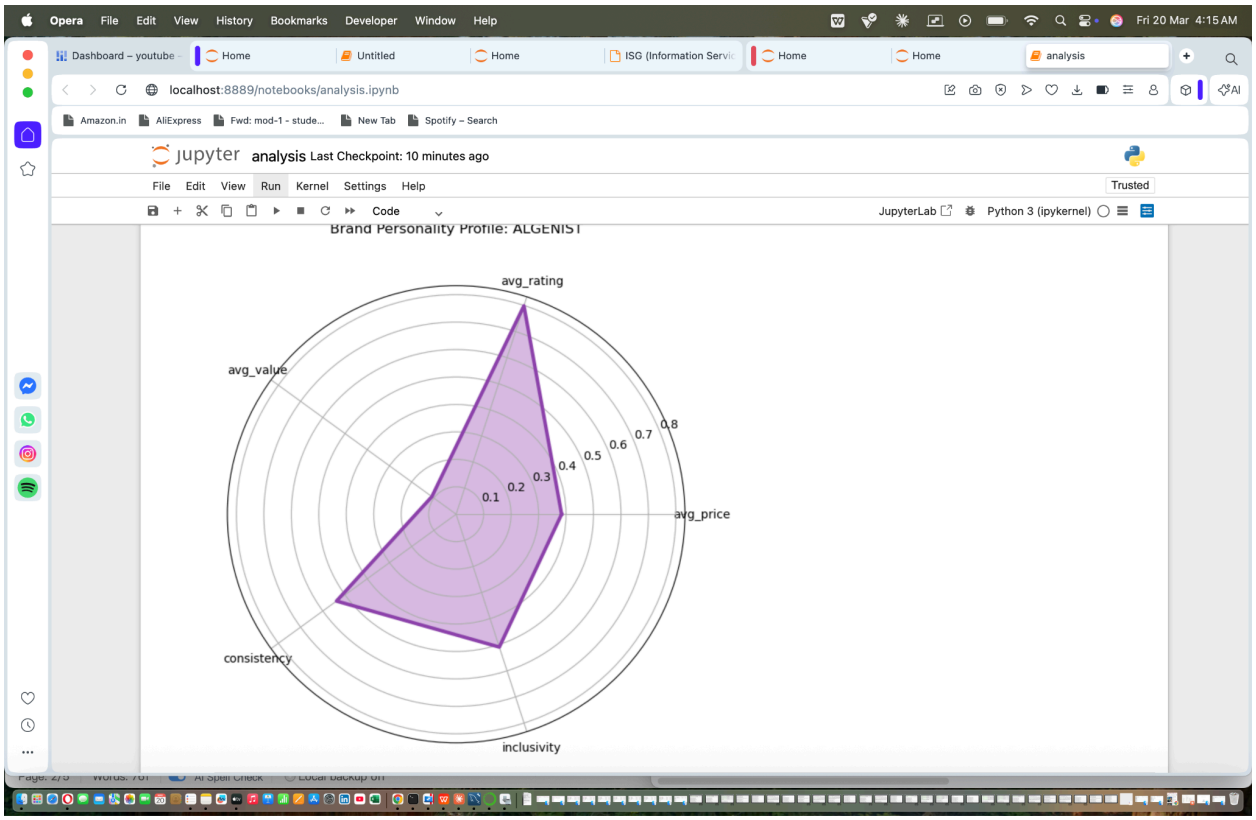


Product Decision Feature

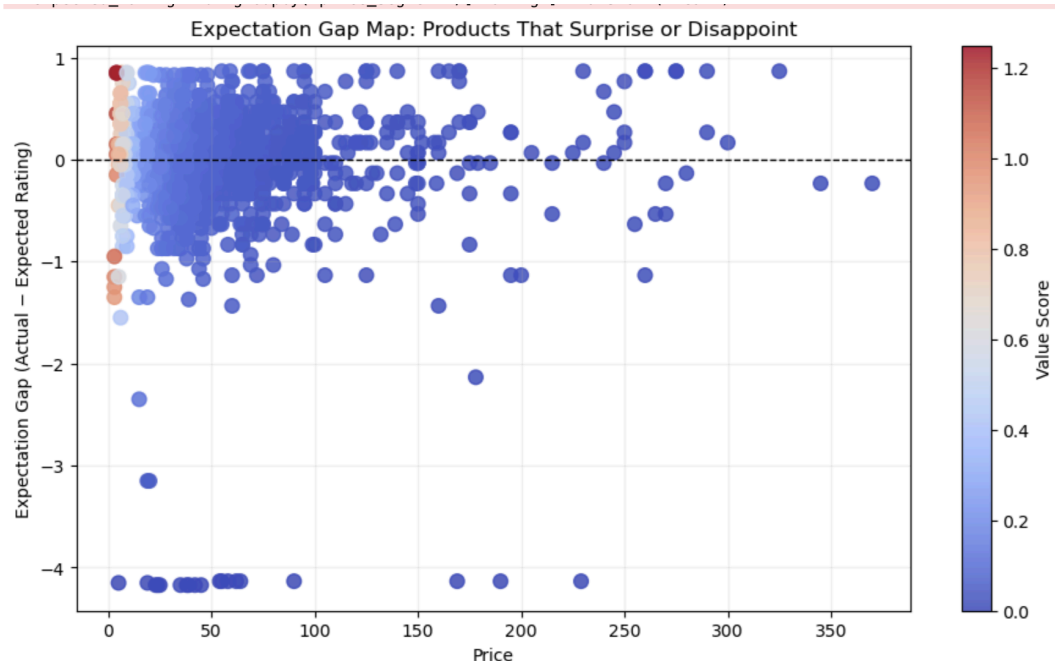
Explanation:

This chart visually shows which products should be promoted, maintained, or removed from the portfolio.

4.



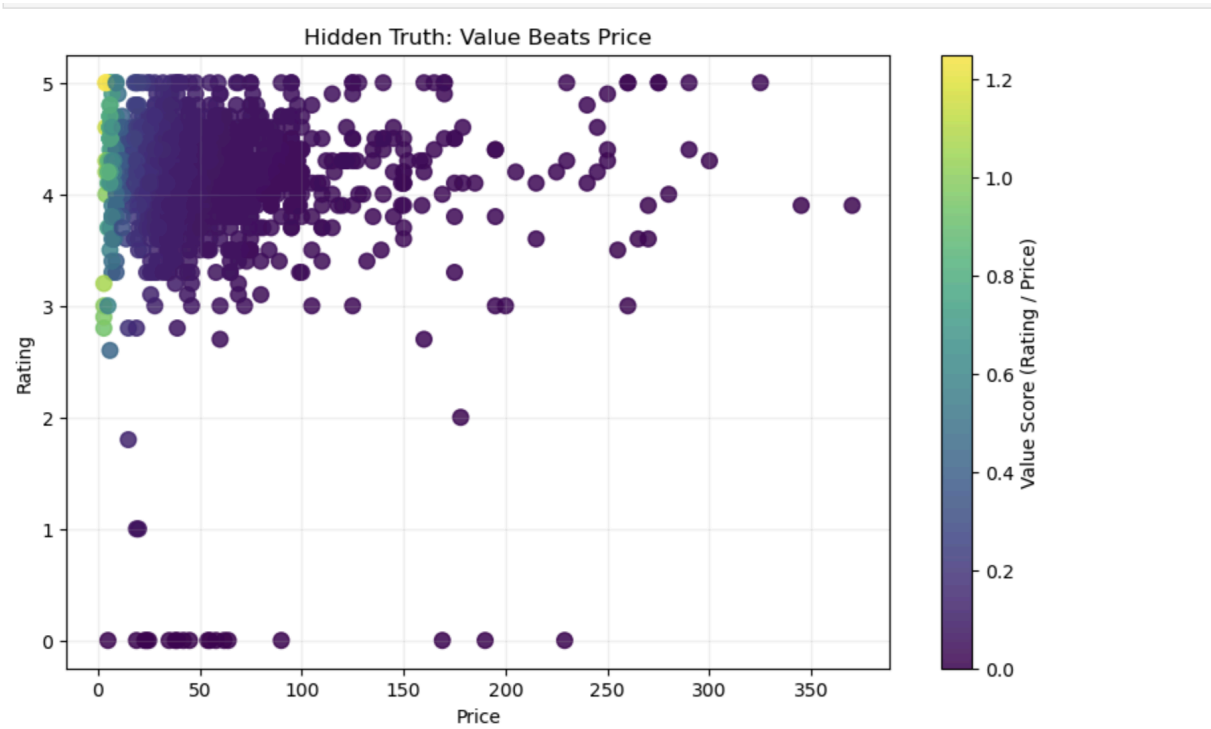
This summarizes each brand's overall pricing and customer satisfaction.
What kind of brand personality is this?"
Explanation:
This quadrant assigns each brand a clear personality based on how expensive and how loved it is.
5.



Expected Rating Features
Explanation:
This calculates how much better or worse a product performed compared to what customers expect at its price level.
This chart shows which products pleasantly surprise customers (above zero) and which disappoint them (below zero).
6.

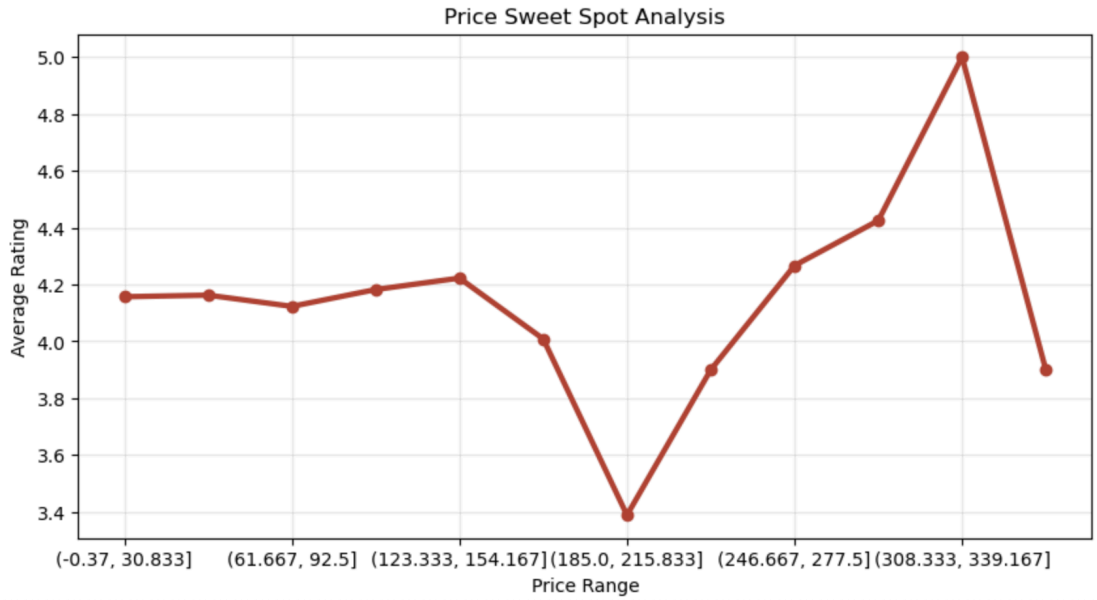
Safe Buy Zone (Visual Recommendation Engine)
Explanation:
This graph visually highlights products that are safest to recommend to customers.

7.



GRAPH 4: Value vs Price (GRADIENT POWER CHART)
Explanation:

This gradient chart reveals hidden high-value products using color intensity.
8.



Price Sweet Spot (Line Insight)

Explanation:
This graph shows where increasing price stops improving customer satisfaction.
9 .

Average Rating by Price Segment

Explanation:
This graph compares customer happiness across cheap, mid, and expensive products.